In the year 1740 there lived in the Latin quarter in Paris a funous miser named Jean Avere. The wealth concealed in the obscure cokery where he resided was believed to be fabulous, and was no doubt really very great necklace of immense value. This he concealed so carefully that he ultimately forgot its hidingplace himself. He sought dirigently for weeks and, failing to find it, became almost insane. This rendered him even less capable of remembrance, and he took to his bed broken in body as in mind. A few weeks later_s_doctor_and an old woman, who had sometimes done odd jobs about his house, were both at his bed-side, seeing that the end was near. As the clock in the neighbouring tower tolled one, he ceased his low muttering and sat up and shricked, "I remenber where it is now. I can put my band on the necklace. For God's sake let me go for it flashings of memory at the great crisis of human fate. Let the reader consider this while we relate an episode in the humble career of a Signalman. Andrew Agge, who may be found on duty in his box at Culgaith, a little station on the Alid must break his fast without leaving his post The confinement and mental strain tell on the system. The strongest men cannot stand it long without feeling its effects. It makes one think of the passionate exclamation in Tom. "Oh, God! that bread should be so dear And flesh and blood so cheap. Our friend had been at the same work for many years, although he was only thirty five when these lines were written. In 1884 he becan to feel that he was about to break down; "I don't know what ails me." he would say but I can't eat." What he forced down produced no sonse of satisfaction or strength Sometimes he was alarmed at finding he could searcely walk on account of giddiness. He said to himself, "What if I should be seized with this at some moment when there is trouble on the line, and I need all my wite about me?" Other features of this ail ment were pains in the chest and sides, costiveness, yellow skin and eyes, bad taste in the mouth, risings of foul gas in the throat, &c. The doctor said Agge must give up his confining work or risk utter disability. He could not. Wife and children were in the way. So he remained at his post and grew worse. But his work was always right, telegrams were properly received and sent, and no train got into trouble through any neglect or fault of his. His disease-indigestion and dyspepsis-took a step further, and brought on kidney and bladder trouble. The doctor, at Appleby, said, "Mr. Agge, you are polymed with the foul stuff in your stomach and blood." His doom seemed to be sealed. It was like a death warrant. Six months more rolled by. On duty one morning he was attacked with so great and so sharp a distress he could neither sit nor stand. He says: "I tumbled down on that looker and lay there all the forencon. Signals might be given, the telegraph needla might click, but I heeded them no more than a man in the grave heeds the beating of the rain againt his own tombstone." He was alone at first, but help arrived, and the poor signalman was carried home. Physicians Isboured on his case without avail. Around his bed were his five little children, the mother be-

Here he lay for weeks, part of the time unconactous. Nothing was to be done but to wai for the end. Then the torpid faculties swakened for a moment. Memory fl shed up, and he recalled the fact that a medicine which he had used with benefit years before an then thrown aside and forgotten, was concealed in a secret place at the signal box. He cent for it, and took a dose. Soon his bowels moved, the kidneys acted, the pain was eased, he felt better. With brightened hope he sent to Carlisle for more. It arrived. He used it; and in a few days the doctors were astonished to find their patient out of doors, and on the road to recovery. He regained his health bompletely, and, in speaking of his experience. said to the writer. "What a wonderful thing it was that, on what promised to be my death-hed; I anddenly remembered where I had put that half used bottle of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. IIIDDEN FOR A STORY OF LOVE AND MYSTERY. BY G. A. HENTY. AUTHOR OF "THE CURSE OF CARNE'S. Hold," GAB YEL ALLEN, M.P.," &O., &O.

CHAPTER VIII. As Miss Leicester's two brothers happened oout to dinger on the evening thinwing the conversation between Hilds and Robert Harbut, she had a good opportunity for opening the sub-'Mamma. I wanted to ask Miss Corbyn to stay here for a bit."

Who is Miss Corbyn, Hilds ?" Mr. Leicester " Mamma bas seen her several times, papa ; she is a friend of Robert's, or I suppose I ought to say she is a client of his." Oh, has Robert got a client? That is something new. I congratulate you, Hilds." "Well, she is not exactly a client, papa, not in the ordinary way. She was introduced to him by a legal friend, or rather the case was introduced as being a most interesting one, and he is advising her. I know all about it. She has been "hamefully troated and is heiress to a fine estate if the could only prove it.". There are a good many people who are heiresses to flue estates if they could only proveit." Mr. Leicester said dryly. "However, my dear, if Robert considers her cause a good onc. no doubt there is something in it; at any rate I am sure be would not have introduced her to you had she not been a respectable young person."

Miss Leicester langhed.

"You hear that, mother; a respectable young person. My dear papa, the is one of the most charming girls I have ever met; I am quite in love with her." "That is all very nice, Hilds; but as you have two brothers resident in the house, I really do is broved."

My dear papa, we have often had nice girls claying in the house and the boys have not lost their hearts to them I don't think that after seven or eight years of London society young men are given to falling in love hastily. "Perhaps not, Hilds; but the unexpected happens sometimes. Are you at liberty to tell us this charming young person's story?" "No. I think not, papa: Of course, Robert

" Of course, my dear." "Bu" I am sure he did not mean me to tell snybody; and I am sure she would not like it." Well, Hilds, of course I don't know why you particularly wish to ask her here, but I certainly think it had better be avoided if possible. Of confee, if Robert approves, there is no reason why you should not be as much with her as you likes but I really do think it would be niger not: to bring her bere. I am not at all supposing that your brothers would be likely to fall in love with her, still it is just as well to a void the possibility of unpleasant complications if one can. Don't you think so, mother ?" "Yes, I quite think so," Mrs. Leicester sail "I have certainly nothing to say against the young lady personally. I have only seen her twice when she has come in with Hilda, and she struck me as a varticularly nice girl. Ladylike. and quiet, and with a very bright pleasant facea sensible face, and pretty, too; but I do not think it would be quite prudent to bring her into the house."

 Miss Leicester was silent. "I will think it over," she said after a pause. and see if it can be managed some other way. Robert had agreed to come round next morning at ten o'clock to hear the result of Hilda's spplication. He saw at once by her face when he came in a the room that she had failed. " to you haven't been able to get your own way for once?" he said with a smile.

" It is on account of the boys," she said rue-"W. II. dear. I really cannot blame your father and mother. One may have every belief that Miss Corbyn is the rightful owner of Corbyn Court; but as I have said, when we talked about it, our chance of proving it appears to me to be small; and if we fail, you must admit, from society's point of view, she would not, he a desirable match for either of your brothers.
